Transparency

- Obligations for market participants to register, disclose inside information and report trading data
- Trust and confidence enabling a functioning, efficient and liquid market places
- Ability for national authorities to identify risks or misdevelopments

Integrity

- Market monitoring and explicit prohibitions of abusive practices in wholesale energy markets
- Prices are set based on fair interplay between supply and demand reflecting market fundamentals
- Level playing field for all market participants
- Undistorted price signals → certainty for trading and investment decisions

- Ensure fair and stable prices for end-consumers and industry
- Increase trading activity and strengthen national energy market platforms
- Create additional business opportunities for market participants
- Prerequisite for right investment in energy infrastructure and generation

Open and competitive energy markets require a legal market regime ensuring that the regulatory authority

- remains independent from market and political interest with sufficient financial resources,
- is able to receive and analyse all necessary market data and
- is equipped with powers to detect and take measures against any abusive behaviour in the market.

A REMIT-based legal framework is crucial to establish confidence in the energy markets and achieve maximum benefits from the process of liberalisation for the economy:
